History 316 Fall 2018: "Interpreting American History" -- Changing and Competing Explanations and Narratives of the American Past

This course is required for students who plan to seek secondary social studies licensure and is open to students seeking licensure in the middle grades social studies. As a class centrally concerned with changing and competing interpretations – changing interpretations among historians, competing stories and silences among those past actors who made history -- we will also consider how best to teach your future students the fine art of interpreting the past (scientifically rigorous, of course, since history partakes of both arts and sciences).

Course Philosophy and Rationale:

History is what historians write, right? Or is it the sum of everything that happened in the past? Certainly past actors – ordinary folks and powerful elites alike – made history with their own sense of their place in time, as they looked with hope and fear toward the future. Everyone has a past, but we can't understand everything at once, so we inherit and invent stories and concepts that interpret history. Those stories and that "memory" has become the subject of historical study. What distinguishes memory from self-serving storytelling, and what distinguishes both from disciplined historical thinking?

Nations and nationalism have been history's greatest story mills, I sometimes think, along with international ideologies like communism or free market capitalism. This course is about the peoples and territories who became the United States, so we will be especially mindful of national myths and histories. Our national conflicts of interest or ambition often expressed themselves as competing versions of "our" shared past that might stress any of the following -- lost national greatness; democracy sacrificed at the altar of corrupting wealth or distant bureaucrats; a common culture enriched, or threatened, by the newcomers to our shores; the hypocrisies of equal rights in a country that spread racial slavery and segregation across the continent; the fulfilled or deferred dreams of equality among citizens struggling to overcome historic oppression.

Here's just one example. Historians continually revise their interpretations. So do citizens, often in heated debate akin to Frederick Douglass, who famously told a white audience in 1852:

The rich inheritance of justice, liberty, prosperity and independence, bequeathed by your fathers, is shared by you, not by me. The sunlight that brought life and healing to you, has brought stripes and death to me. This Fourth [of] July is yours, not mine. You may rejoice, I must mourn. To drag a man in fetters into the grand illuminated temple of liberty, and call upon him to join you in joyous anthems, [would be] inhuman mockery and sacrilegious irony.

Disciplined historical thinking and research can challenge both popular and elite interpretations of the past, overturning "conventional wisdom," inviting us to seek real wisdom. Including suppressed or neglected voices in the national narrative can give us a more accurate sense of the conflicts as well as the consensus values that shaped the national identity. My own path as a historian has taught me that that ideological thinking must give way for nuance, contradiction, uncomfortable truths, and the realization that some things cannot be known with certitude, that they can only be inferred with plausible and incomplete evidence. As teachers and scholars, we must keep alive habits of evidence-based reasoning and interpretation, habits that will help us guide our students to fuller and more accurate understandings of how we got here, just why we are at odds with each other, and where we might go.

Our conflicts often expressed themselves in disputes over the meaning and application of keywords: democracy, "the people," progress, law and order, law and justice, equality and "nature's" hierarchies, liberty and slavery. We have often been odds as to whether America is an exceptional or a tragically typical nation in the use of its imperial power, especially in Latin America and Asia. We have been conflicted about how to change, who should control change, what the legitimate tools of democratic change include. Is disruptive protest a legitimate, if admittedly risky, tool of democratic change? Should we return to traditions and ways that guided us in the past, to restoration of a lost law and order, or to active promotion of middle class security? Others have asked in conflicted times: Should we innovate and reform, even promote revolution, especially when our cherished traditions have a Revolution at their core? Has "free enterprise" ever been fully free of the support and regulation of government?

This course combines in-depth examinations of key episodes and consideration of long-term historical trends that are only capable of comprehension through concepts and theory. By examining particular decisions in the past, we shed light on human agency and the scope of freedom and responsibility that was open to historical actors.

We will consider the content, concepts, and methods involved in making professional sense of the past, across wide terrains, and in small places. We will consider in some depth how historians' innovative research methodologies, discoveries, analyses of new sources, and changing convictions all have re-shaped interpretations of the past. Rigorous historical method can often challenge the popular "cultural curriculum" embedded in our own and others understandings of the past. But we should also try to understand how memories and narratives are inevitably different, dividing us as much as they united us in common causes.

Historical thinking demands empathy and sensitivity to human difference. Historical narratives and explanations will always have elements of art or literature. But we also aim toward scientific rigor and we utilize concepts that are not in common currency (though usually they are more accessible than those of physics or biology). Just as physicists must master gravity, waves, and particles, we must understand periodization and multiple causation, and above all must sort out settled facts from plausible inferences and misleading half-truths.

How we divide history into periods -- "periodization" -- can vary with who we put at the center of our story (just as physicists see waves or particles depending on the structure of their experiments). For Indians, 1815 is arguably the true watershed in American history, not 1776 or 1865 (1815 is when Native Americans lost the ability to play European empires against each other, to negotiate power with European "conflict partners"). Similarly, for African Americans, the expansive and optimistic "Progressive Era" is actually called the "Nadir," the bottom, the worst hard time in Black history, of violence, and racial control, and oppression (when society became more segregated, lynching reached its peak, and the system of convict labor most intensively targeted black men).

Course Content: A summary of various "modules" and connecting threads (corresponding to different assignments):

How can archaeology and ecology change our understanding of European settlement and Indian displacement and decline in the 16th and 17th centuries? How can a deeper understanding of disease change our appreciation of the extent and richness of pre-contact cultures?

How can intellectual history, public discourse, and foundational texts -- reading drafts of the Declaration of Independence, for example-- provide a window into contradictions and hidden events in the American experiment: in this case, how could a Republic dedicated to the proposition that all men were created equal also perpetuate and expand the largest slave system in world history?

How can oral history give insight into slaves who left no written records, taking into account ways in which testimony is shaped by hindsight and the passage of time, and the relations of power between interviewer and interviewee?

How can analysis of visual culture, especially photography and film, open up appreciation of urban or wartime experience otherwise not visible to the public? How did pictures galvanize audiences to support social change (from tenement reform in New York in the 1890s to civil rights in the wake of Birmingham's dogs in 1963)?

How can social historians interpret data from the census to get a fuller picture of how some groups advanced up the social ladder while others stayed working class or poor? How can numbers change our understanding of the multicultural peopling of the continent and the mythic migrations that became core stories of our culture?

How can a new theory refocus attention on underappreciated people or causes of change? For example, what difference does it make to think of the West through different conceptual frameworks; as a frontier of expanding democracy, or as a zone of conquest, or as a "middle ground" of exchange between European and indigenous cultures?

How can "psychohistory," the application of contemporary understanding of psychological disorders, help us understand controversial people such as the accusers of witches in Salem in 1692, or the violent anti-slavery martyr John Brown in 1859?

How did legal history and famous murder cases (such as the Sacco-Vanzetti trials of the 1920s) become lightning rods for conflicting ideas and mass anxieties about what America should be, who should belong, and how we should resolve conflicts between public order and the civil liberties of marginal or radical people?

How can differing models of decision making re-focus our understanding of world-changing events like the use of the atomic bomb against Japan? What happens when we relocate aspects of "the decision" from the deliberations of specific "rational actors" -- Harry Truman and his immediate advisors -- and consider the international history of air war, or competition among branches of the largest military bureaucracy in human history?

How can placing our heroes and symbols back in the contexts that made them possible change our appreciation of leadership in history: Teddy Roosevelt, the champion the “public interest” against corporate greed; Martin Luther King, the visionary strategist of nonviolence; Woodrow Wilson, the defeated champion of international cooperation; Rosa Parks whose “tired feet” and quiet dignity started a revolution?

Student Learning Objectives [With Appropriate Key Words]

Upon successful completion of this course, students will demonstrate skills of historical analysis and interpretation including:

- Combine evidence and theory to explain broad patterns of change in American history – social, economic, cultural, and political – and identify key watersheds and transformations. Key Words: change, continuity, revolution, watersheds, periods, political and social structure, BIG history
- Interpret, compare, corroborate, and place in historical context competing primary sources. Extract evidence and make inferences based on contextual knowledge. Evaluate strength and weaknesses of different kinds of evidence – oral history, photographs, cartoons, diaries, speeches, journalism, films and television programs. Key Words: Primary Source Analysis; inferences, contextualization, corroboration, inconsistency, “reading the silences.”
- Analyze and evaluate debates among historians who change their interpretations and questions in light of new discoveries of evidence, new questions, new social movements, new theories, and new issues of concern to everyone. Compare these versions of the past to widely shared cultural beliefs (the “cultural curriculum”). Key Words: Historiography; cultural curriculum; ideology; evidence and interpretation.
- Identify and evaluate popular, dominant, and dissenting historical narratives within our culture and explain why they changed over time. Key Words: Memory and Ideology.
- Challenge arguments of historical inevitability – “it was bound to happen because it happened.” Did past actors exercise no choice or agency within constrained circumstances they did not make? Evaluate the impact of contingent, unpredictable events and irrational actions that changed the course of history. Key Words: Agency and Structure. Contingency.
- Analyze and explain cause-and-effect relationships in terms of multiple causation; distinguish among and evaluate the relative weights of different causes in any given historical explanation. Key Words: Multiple Causation; POV point of view.
- Develop a repertoire of teachable history, a approach to democratic pedagogy, and a more inclusive understanding of past actors. Key Words: Vocation, pedagogy for democracy.

“Men make their own history, but they do not make it as they please; they do not make it under self-selected circumstances, but under circumstances existing already, given and transmitted from the past.”
--Karl Marx

Roadmap of Skill Development: We will spend a great deal of time in the first half of the semester analyzing primary sources and addressing their use as tools for teaching. Much of the common discussion will revolve around assigned readings for everyone and how the three main scholars help us understand changing interpretations. Short writing exercises will ask each of you to clarify your own interpretation of the events and trends we all consider. Your interpretations need not be definitive. Sometimes posing “informed” questions is half the battle. Most of these writing assignments will take the form of discussion among groups of 4 people, who also meet in person. Doing history involves assessing the role of ideas, economic forces, individuals, and large organizations in making change. By mid-semester everyone will dive into the historiography of the Atomic Bomb controversy to better understand how we can use the most informed scholarship to sift the wheat from the chaff and ask informed questions. Everyone then will “do history,” working exclusively from primary sources, to gain a fuller picture of the mass coalition that made up the 1963 March on Washington (oral presentations will accompany these exercises, in round table format). Each of you will end the course with “source dive” that takes a commonly accepted narrative and creates or refines a different interpretation based on primary and secondary sources. All three longer writing assignments will reflect your individual interests and interpretations at the same time that they speak to questions the class is considering.

Canvas and the Google Drive: Canvas is the learning system where you will find all assignments and rubrics and links to sources not found in the Red Reader. Sometimes it will link to folders or files in Google Drive, where you may find and download material that may be useful to you in future or in the final project.

Electronic Devices: Because some our class period will be devoted to the evaluation of web sites and online information, I encourage you to bring laptops and tablets. Put away all phones and don't text. "Lids down" should signal: "time to give the face-to-face class 100% attention!" Classes suffer when students bury their heads in their laptops, or swipe at their phones, and thereby disengage in real time from the ideas of the professor and other students. These require eye contact and body language, the full range of person to person social skills that our devices obstruct sometimes. Please don't be offended when I ask this of you.

Email Etiquette and Efficiency – Required Salutation and Subject Line "HIS 316 Question"

Please address questions to me via email regarding assignments, appointments, mishaps. Subject line: "HIS 316 question." I have a filter and deal with them all at once. If you don't hear back from me in 24 hours (weekends excepted), please try me again.

Plagiarism: Plagiarism is a serious offense of the academic code and is treated as such by faculty. Do your own work and clearly cite any sources you rely upon for your information. You may view the university's academic integrity policy for further information. Familiarize yourself with the responsibilities of the instructor and the options I have: <http://sa.uncg.edu/handbook/academic-integritypolicy/> In clear cases, I will report violations of the honor code to the Dean of Students through one of the two paths explained on the website, both of which involve conferences with me, agreed penalties or mediation of the Academic Integrity Board.

(Beware specifically "Patch Writing" a form of plagiarism that plagues undergraduates, starting at 4:30).

Required Reading:

Davidson, James West and Mark Hamilton Lytle. After the Fact: the Art of Historical Detection, 6th ed. (or 5th, as I have digitized new chapters). New York: McGraw-Hill, 2010. Available for purchase in the campus bookstore.

Selections from James Loewen, Lies My Teacher Told Me: What Your American History Textbooks Got Wrong (1995, 2007). We will read a few chapters from this book. As it is available for 5 cents plus shipping on Amazon, it is well worth owning, reading and pondering.

Course Reader available only at Copy King, 611 W. Lee St., Greensboro, ph. 333-9900 (CALL THEM FIRST: ready this afternoon. I will confirm via email). Hereafter referred to as the "Red Reader." This is only available at Copy King, and is an excellent low cost alternative to published collections or bookstore high prices. Please don't ask about pdfs; from repeated experience, these have not been conducive to class learning. Everybody engaging each other and the highlighted, dog-eared red readers has consistently produced better learning outcomes, from repeated experience on my part.

Supplemental and optional primary sources, scholarly articles and links to websites related to doing and teaching history will be posted on Canvas. Check the Modules in CANVAS. When I ask you to skim, or when different groups have different readings, then links and pdfs become optimal.

Strategic Reading with a Purpose: Expect to read about 60-70 pages per week — allow quiet time for careful preparation and focused analysis. The class will have more discussion and dialogue than lecture; hence the quality of your learning rises or falls on students' common fund of insight and individuals' willingness to share, agree, and disagree. Please make that commitment to reading, preparing, and collaborating on answering weekly questions. The University and I assume that every 3 credit hour course will involve 6 hours of reading and writing and preparation outside of class.

How to Read: Use the guiding questions at the end of textbook chapters and consider carefully how I help you structure your reading in each of the CANVAS modules. Employ your skills of previewing, reading, highlighting, note taking, and of course, writing. Good writing consists of accurate paraphrase, summary, and selective quotation. Then in more formal writing you aim for grammatical sentences, coherent paragraphs (each with one controlling idea), and overall essay coherence (frequently evident in good transitions between paragraphs).

Syllabus as Contract: Check here first. Almost all questions can be answered by careful reading or requests for clarification. By taking this class you agree to put your best efforts toward each class and assignment. In return you are entitled to timely feedback on assignments and clear answers to questions.

Graded Requirements (Summary):

- I. Participation, Discussion, Peer Support (20%).
- II. Quizzes on Canvas (15%):
- III. Weekly Blog Posts and Comments -- before and after discussions on focused questions. (25%)
- IV. Historiographical Analysis: Changing Interpretations and Evidence in the Atomic Bomb Controversy (10%) 4-5 pp. DUE October 30
- V. "Doing History": Primary Source Analysis and Narrative on One of the Constituencies and Perspectives at the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom August 28, 1963 4-5 pp. (10%) DUE NOVEMBER 15 WITH IN-CLASS REPORT – SIGN UP for OPTIONS on Google Drive
- VI. Final Project – "Reinterpreting The Past" (20%) 8-10 pp. Peer Reviews Due 24 hours later.

Graded Requirements (Detailed):

I. Participation, Support, and Peer Reviews of Final Projects (20%)

Regular and punctual attendance is required. More than three unexcused absences will adversely affect your grade. Excused absences are granted within 24 hours of class only if they involve serious or contagious illness or personal and family emergency. Don't even request an excuse for conflicting work schedules, sports, or early vacation plans. We evaluate the clarity, pertinence, and conciseness of your comments and questions during the general class discussion. Quality is as important as quantity. Preparation, active speaking, cooperation, and respectful debate, is essential. I will lecture, but most of the time I will set up a framework of questions, then orchestrate – support small group discussions, help with presentations, synthesize and counterpoise your statements, spur you to deeper reflection. Since you all plan to be teachers, I'm not thinking anybody will be too shy to speak! Each of you will write up helpful peer evaluations of one of your peers' final projects, at a preliminary stage and final stage.

II. Quizzes on Canvas (15%)

Outside of Class, I will work up a set of quizzes on course content, to take the pulse of student understanding. These will be quick "formative" assessments, outside of class through the CANVAS quiz function. NO MIDTERM OR FINAL. These will be short answer, identification, and multiple choice quizzes. I will open them Thursday evening or afternoon, and close them Sunday at midnight. Academic Integrity applies, of course: these are your responses alone. Open book, open note. (I will never give meaningless “facts and dates” questions— the questions will ALWAYS reflect important themes and ideas).

III. “Blog Posts and Comments” On Canvas (25%)

Weekly reflections before and after discussions on Canvas --- always focused on questions about changing and competing interpretations of the past. Each person writes 400-500 words a week. These are informal but substantial assignments. Four people in your group will each write once a week for the benefit of each other.

Soon I'll break you into groups of 4, and reshuffle the groups every 4 weeks. For each of the 2 classes each week, at least one person of the 4 will write before each class, and at least one of the 4 will write after each class, in response (2x2=4). Everyone will write about an interpretation that they favor, and why, in terms of concepts that makes sense to them and the evidence that backs them up. These correspond closely to class discussions.

Note how historians changed their interpretations of the past. Or evaluate, contrast, contextualize the “voices” of past actors. How did they express their conflicts with their own interpretations, narratives, omissions, keywords? Pick up one or more of the questions that I posed that asks you to interpret past actors. What for example, was the most interesting piece of evidence or line of new inquiry a scholar employed to cast the past in a new light? Or again, contrast the perspectives of past actors on the same events. Be selective, not exhaustive, but be substantial! We will let you know if you are being too granular and missing aspects of the big picture, OR if you seem to be just generalizing without reference to the actual topics, people, and events.

IV. Historiographical Analysis: New Interpretations and Evidence on the Middle Ground of the Atomic Bomb Controversy After 1995 (10%) 4-5 pp. (10%) DUE OCTOBER 30 ON CANVAS AND IN CLASS FOR DISCUSSION AND DEBATE

These papers examine in greater depth ways in which historians have interpreted and re-interpreted the U.S. decision to defeat Japan using the atomic bomb. This culminates a two week module on the bomb. I ask you to go a step further than the common readings and to identify a historian that no one else has read in the class, someone who made a significant contribution since 1995 to “middle ground” discussion between extreme positions. The Walker summary historiography article and its footnotes, together with seven subtopics I post, will make this process less daunting. Please do not rely upon opinion editorials or textbook writings from anyone who has not done in-depth scholarship on the issues. This is an exercise in evaluating professional scholarship, not scoring points.

Obviously you won't be able to write about the whole controversy, just a piece, such as the assertion that the US was really waging “atomic diplomacy” against the Soviets. You need only represent the views of one scholar, but your search will expose you probably to several. You need not read an entire book (indeed you should not) in order to understand the contribution a scholar made, the important evidence she unearthed, or the most productive line of questioning he opened. Students will discuss and debate positions in class October 30.

On Historiography: Getting on top of historiography is an absolutely essential core skill you must acquire if you are to be an effective history teacher. As James Loewen amply demonstrates, textbooks cannot be relied upon to give you the freshest material for effective pedagogy. They contain too much poorly curated information and inadequate interpretation or controversy. Hint: the OAH Magazine of History is perhaps the most accessible and important scholarly journal for history teachers. But don't neglect websites with scholarly articles and links, such as BackStory With the American History Guys, or PBS Video's “American Experience.”

V. Primary Source Analysis, or “Doing History”: Constituencies and Perspectives at the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom August 28, 1963. 4-6 pp. (10%). DUE November 15 on Canvas and class discussion.

The March on Washington is commonly commemorated as the mass platform for Martin Luther King's “I Have a Dream” Speech, almost as if there were not more than a quarter million people, and 30 other speakers, each bringing common but distinctive understandings of civil rights and demands for racial equality and economic justice. On the Google Drive you will find folders with a range of primary sources that I have collected. (See the bibliography that accompanies this assignment on Canvas). What you want to find and capture is the March on Washington in two or three dimensions beyond the Dream Speech and the simplistic half-truth that it was a march to support the Kennedy civil rights bill. Several constituencies had different reasons for coming to Washington, different levels of satisfaction with the outcome, different understandings of whether the March was supposed to “support” John Kennedy’s civil rights Bill, or propose radically more far-reaching legislation and action. Compare and contrast them. (See Canvas Guidelines).

VI. Final Research Project. (20%) Due Tuesday Dec 4 at 3:00 PM 8-10 pages.

Identify a commonly accepted or popular interpretation of an event or person, as embodied in a news account, public speech, historic site, widely read textbook or general nonfiction book, or a policy announcement. Then, based on an equal share of primary sources and secondary sources, write up a "counter-narrative" or alternative explanation that you think more closely corresponds, or more fully captures, what we should learn (or at least consider) as a lesson from the past worth teaching and debating. Almost all the chapters assigned to you have done this in one way or another, so you have a ready model.

Using various document collections available in the library, edited online sources referenced in the books, or various links to scholarly, curated websites, first you will together a set of primary and secondary sources (at least two of each), and get it approved. Two weeks later the paper will be due. Examples from the course: the core narrative of Buffalo Bill's Wild West show; the Air Force Association's critique of the Smithsonian exhibit on the Enola Gay; the Miracle Worker representation of Helen Keller as a plucky individualist; Howard Zinn's assertion that African Americans opposed participation in World War II; John Rambo's and Ronald Reagan's blaming the US Vietnam defeat on politicians who "would not let them [the military] win." Again model your essay on the After the Fact authors, or James Loewen, or Sam Wineburg as you mix references to scholarship (secondary sources) and actual voices from past actors (primary sources).

All paper ideas must be cleared with me two weeks ahead of the due date, after a conference with me before Thanksgiving, in a one page annotated bibliography of sources that clearly identifies interpretations at the core of each cited source. Each student will peer review one proposal and one paper (I will assign on Canvas), and will receive extra credit for actively helping someone find good source material.

Grading Scale:

A (93 and above), A- (90-92); B+ (87-89), B (83-86), B- (80-82); C+ (77-79), C (73-76), C- (70-72); D+ (67-69), D (63-66), D- (60-62); F (less than 60, unacceptable work). We will assign points on a 1000 point scale to comprise the several components of assessment that follow.

SCHEDULE OF MEETINGS AND ASSIGNMENT DUE DATES
ALWAYS CHECK CANVAS FOR FULL READINGS AND REFINED QUESTIONS

8/14: Introductions

Reviewing the Syllabus – Discussing structure and learning activities. Student introductions. Please make sure your CANVAS profile is up to date with a photograph, and tells us something of your goals, background, and academic interests.

8/16: How We Think, Write, and Teach: Academic Disciplines and the “Cultural Curriculum”

Wineburg, Sam, and Susanne Wilson. "Peering at History through Different Lenses: The Role of Disciplinary Perspectives in Teaching History." Packer, George, "Her Own: Oprah Winfrey," from The Unwinding (2014) (6) (National Book Award Winner).

Questions: If the pantheon of American heroes speaks to the popular historical "cultural curriculum" (education) that "schooling" plays only a small part in shaping, what do the popular choices and common understandings of these heroes tell us about how ordinary Americans think? See Canvas for fuller elaboration.

For Further Inquiry (Optional): How can historians model historical thinking? Make sure you check out Sam Wineberg's "Document Based Lessons" on the Reading Like A Historian website of the Stanford History Education Group.

8/23: Before Written Records: Archaeology, Demography, and Ecology in the "Columbian Exchange"

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 1. Contact, 1-30 (28)

Skim in the Google Drive My Highlighted Passages: Loewen, Lies My Teacher Told Me, "The Truth About the First Thanksgiving," 74-84.

How does revising our understanding of North American ecology before British settlement also compel a revision of North American Indian history? How did learning about the ecological changes made by native peoples, and what happened when they disappeared, change how our authors understood the "Columbian exchange"? How are historians and archaeologists compelled to reinterpret, not just reconstruct, the past?

See Canvas for full details on questions.

Optional: for an extraordinary survey of the controversy over pre-Columbian population and Indian culture east of the Mississippi, see Charles C. Mann, "1491," Atlantic (March 2002), online archive.

8/28: Life is "Nasty, British, and Short": Colonial Virginia and the Multiple Causes of High Mortality First day of group discussions and Posts.

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 2 Serving Time in Virginia, 31-50 (19). Skim through the romance of Pocahontas and Smith's "initiation" into Powhatan's political sphere of tribute (31-35), and make sure you understand the point of the chapter that follows: the driving obsession with profit that Davidson and Lytle want you to conclude was the source of many ills.

Earle, Carville. "Environment, Disease and Mortality in Early Virginia." YJHGE Journal of Historical Geography 5, no. 4 (1979): 365-90. Core of story is on pp. 370-1, 373-4. (5) (Google folder). Skim this piece, focusing on the pages cited, and note where I've highlighted Earle's focus on deadly Jamestown. See my comments on this in Canvas. (Actually I brought this to the attention of Lytle and Davidson, and they wrote me back).

Dr. Simmons account of the "Starving Time" in October 1609 Virginia, excerpted from John Smith General Historie of Virginia, 1624: The Fourth Booke included in Narratives of early Virginia, 1606-1625. Edited by Lyon Gardiner Tyler. New York, Barnes & Noble [1907]

Report of Nathaniel Butler, Governor of Bermuda, 1622, and "The Virginia Planters' Answer to Captain Butler, 1623," in Narratives of early Virginia, 1606-1625. Edited by Lyon Gardiner Tyler, ed. New York, Barnes & Noble [1907] NOTE: Gov. Butler's allegations are quoted verbatim in each section before the Planters' self-defense.

See full range of Questions in Canvas. Larger issues of the colony's life and death: What were the principal causes of such extraordinary mortality rates in the first twenty years of the colony? Starvation? Diseases? What do the authors of After the Fact place at the center of their explanation and what does Earle in "Environment, Disease and Mortality"? Primary Sources: What details does each biased observer supply that might help us understand the complex factors that Davidson, Lytle, and Earle identify? BIG history: what choices, values, and power relations fueled the Atlantic commodity boom in sugar, slaves, and tobacco?

8/30: New England – Conflict and Transformation – Sorting and Interpreting Multiple Causation in the Salem Witch Trials

John Winthrop, "Reason to be Considered for Justifying the Undertakers of the Intended Plantation in New England," 1629; and "A Modell of Christian Charity," 1630

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 3: The Visible and Invisible Worlds of Salem 52-73 (21)

Revisit in the Google Drive: Loewen, Lies My Teacher Told Me, "The Truth About the First Thanksgiving," especially, 84-92. (8) How do certain facts about the interaction of the "Pilgrim Fathers" and native peoples force a re-telling of the Thanksgiving story?

Questions: Who did the British who settled in Massachusetts thank most often, and for what? What kind of community did John Winthrop envision? Do we still regard early New England as an exceptional "city on a hill"? SIXTY YEARS LATER, WHAT WAS HAPPENING TO SPLIT WINTHROP'S COMMONWEALTH IN SALEM? Of the many interpretations and causes of the Salem witch craze -- rapid social change and commercialization; threats to gender hierarchy; religious diversity; legal abuse; the terror of Indian Wars -- which seem the most compelling to you?

9/4: Republicanism and Independence from All Sides

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 4. Declaring Independence, 75-96 (20)

James Loewen, "Juxtaposing Quotations to Misrepresent a Founding Father, D.C. Jefferson Memorial" in Loewen, Lies across America: What Our Historic Sites Get Wrong. New York: Simon & Shuster, 1999, 327-332.

Calloway, Colin G. The Scratch of a Pen: 1763 and the Transformation of North America. New York: Oxford University Press, 2006, 27-28, 97-100. On George Washington, Indians, and the Proclamation Line of 1763 restricting western settlement after the French and Indian War.

Selections from Massachusetts slave memorials 1775. From Documentary History of the Negro People.

Questions: What are the essential contexts necessary to explain Jefferson's Declaration of Independence and the ensuing revolutionary war? Enlightenment intellectual history? Virginia political history? Virginians land hunger beyond the Proclamation Line of 1763? See Canvas for fuller questions.

9/7: Westward Expansion – Jacksonian Democracy? Jacksonian Aristocracy? Jacksonian Aggression?

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 6. Jackson's Frontier-and Turner's, 124-146 (22)

Wilson Lumpkin, Gov. Georgia, "Speech to Congress," for Removal, 1830 in "The Age of Jackson: the Removal of the Cherokees," ch. 9 in the South in the History of the Nation: A reader v. 1, ed. Link and Wheeler (Bedford 1999)

Excerpt, Andrew Jackson, "Address to Congress," December 1830, downloaded from <http://www.loc.gov/rr/program/bib/ourdocs/Indian.html>.

Questions: There's no mistake this period is called the "Age of Jackson." What has this meant for successive generations of historians? What pictures of history and Indian culture do Jackson and Lumpkin deploy to make their cases for Indian removal? (see Canvas).

9/11: From "Middle Ground" to "Conquest" – Cherokee Acculturation and Cherokee Removal

Loewen, Lies My Teacher Told Me, 4. "Through Red Eyes," 100-134.

John Ross, et. al. "Excerpt from a letter from a Cherokee delegation to John C Calhoun, Sec. of War, during Pres. James Monroe's Administration. City of Washington, February 11, 1824 [What arguments do Ross, et.al. make to perpetuate Cherokee sovereignty?]

"Memorial of John Ross and others, delegates from the Cherokee Indians . . . To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives," Senate Document 120 "On Cherokee Treaty of 1835," January 12, 1838.
Catharine Beecher, "Circular Addressed to Benevolent Ladies of the U. States," 1 December 1829. in How Did the Removal of the Cherokee Nation from Georgia Shape Women's Activism in the North, 1817-1838?, by Kathryn Kish Sklar (Women and Social Movements in the United States database, accessed Sept 16, 2014). (Take a look at this database; great options for writing final project).

Questions: Loewen's argument is nuanced and wide ranging, but supportive of the idea of the West as a zone of conquest and a "middle ground" of cultural exchange. What crucial events determined that the Cherokee, despite the roads they had travelled to assimilate to the American Republic, would nonetheless be rejected as partners in the future of Georgia? Crucial: What happened when Indians lost their "conflict partners"? Compare Beecher's and Chief John Ross's pictures of Indian "civilization" with those of Governor William Lumpkin of Georgia and President Jackson (last class assignment). How do these interpretations of Cherokee society and history line up with their respective conflicting political aims?

9/13: Anti-Slavery and Sectional Crisis

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 7. The Madness of John Brown, 148-169 (21) (long autobiographical letter of Brown's can be skimmed; we will focus less on judging Brown's mental health and more on the judgments his contemporaries made of him, and what "madness" meant to them).

Loewen, Lies My Teacher Told Me, 4. "John Brown and Abraham Lincoln: The Invisibility of Antiracism in American History Textbooks," For now read 172-195 only. (22)

Sign up to read and report on one of the primary source responses to the execution of John Brown. See Canvas!

Questions: How have judgements of Brown's sanity and insanity dovetailed with political positions on the war and slavery over time? Is Loewen right, that not only in the textbooks but the culture, that the idealism of white anti-racists has been obscured by the imputation of insanity? How did interpretations of Brown's actions accelerate and reflect polarization of the country across sectional lines of north and south and political lines of Democrat and Republican? Has recent work on Brown by David Reynolds been part of a troubling rehabilitation of violence as a means of social change?

Optional: David Reynolds, "Freedom's Martyr," New York Times, Dec 1, 2009; and Caleb McDaniel, "John Brown and Nonviolence," May 9, 2005 HistoryNewsNetwork.org

9/18: Recovering Slavery and Emancipation from Below, Through Oral History

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 8. The View from the Bottom Rail, 171-199 (28)

Read both ex-slave narratives FIRST, pp. 184-186; 188-190. Or better, read the originals I downloaded from the American Memory website. Don't read any of the authors' discussion until after you have contrasted: 1) How each narrative interprets treatment of slaves and their responses. 2) How each recalls treatment of children and families. 3) How each recalls the collective histories of Africans in America, Indians, and whites.

Then read the rest: How did your approach to primary sources change as a result of this exercise? Explain how the concept "economy of deception" is absolutely crucial to understanding issues of "authenticity" and the kind of inferences you can make from any primary source. Again here, the last couple pages of the chapter are the KEY(STONE) to understand everything they want us to take away. What kind of society produced such split performances of "personae"?

9/20: Clashing Pasts: White Supremacy, the "Lost Cause," and Confederate Monuments

Finish: Loewen, Lies My Teacher Told Me, 4. "John Brown and Abraham Lincoln: The Invisibility of Antiracism in American History Textbooks," 195-203.

"Dying for Dixie," from Horwitz, Confederates in the Attic

Individuals should sign up in Canvas for one of many historians who have weighed in on the debate about what to do with Confederate Monuments. What among the many ironies in "Dying for Dixie" is the most tragic? What does it reveal about the "heritage" wrapped around Confederate symbols? What does your chosen historian think, and what do you think about what he/she thinks (tell us the latter after fully informing us of the former)??

9/25: 19th Century Class Formation and Its Legacies

Loewen, Lies, 7 "The Land of Opportunity," 194-207. (14 pp.).

Andrew Carnegie, Triumphant Democracy (London, 1886), 11-15.

Andrew Carnegie, "Wealth" North American Review (June 1889), 653-5. Better known as "The Gospel of Wealth."

Henry George, Progress and Poverty (New York, 1935, 1885), 3-8, 544-6.

BIG history questions for today: What "hidden injuries of class" have afflicted Americans, in Loewen's view? How real was the "rags to riches" story in the late 19th Century, or even the "rags to respectability" story? How has class mobility varied in different eras and with respect to race and ethnic group membership?

On Carnegie and George: Compare Carnegie and George: Where does wealth come from? Does progress produce poverty, or is inequality the precondition for the advancement of everybody? Are concentrations of wealth consistent with republican government, or is everyone's liberty at risk when inequality so pervades the structure of opportunity? How does each author understand the progress of "the race"? Find out about these guys: What about the biographies of Carnegie and George might help account for their different analyses?

9/27: The Immigrant City and the Scope of the Middle Class Conscience

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 9. The Mirror with a Memory, 203-228 (25) It's a good chapter but doesn't practice what it preaches: , that is, it does not read texts and pictures together (so we will). There is a MIND MAP of the chapter on Canvas.

Primary Source Analysis: Jacob Riis, How the Other Half Lives, 1890). EVERYONE (Red reader): Introduction; (4) . ch. 3, The Mixed Crowd; (7). What statements suggest that Riis is blaming greedy slum profiteers for poor people's woes? Who rises, and who "take their slums with them," to quote his metaphor for culturally deficient people who cannot make the most of their situations?

10/2: Between Victorian and Progressive: Jacob Riis' Immigrant Nativism

SUBGROUPS: ON GOOGLE DRIVE, FIND VARIOUS CHAPTERS ABOUT PARTICULAR IMMIGRANT GROUPS THAT YOU WILL EXAMINE WITH THE SAME QUESTIONS IN MIND. Identify the main points and best quotes and images that capture Riis' analysis of each group in the "queer conglomerate mass of heterogenous elements" that was New York City's working class. Why does he make these distinctions? Who are the worthy poor, who are the undeserving?

Group A (see individual assignments in Cavas): Compare 9. Chinatown; 13. The Color Line in New York (compare Chinese and Blacks). Photo titles: "Chinese Opium Joint," "Black-And-Tan Dive"

Group B: 10. Jewtown, first half; 11. The Sweaters of Jewtown, first half. 12. The Bohemians--Tenement-House Cigarmaking Photo titles: "Knee Pants," "Bohemian Cigar Makers"

Group C: Compare: 20. Working Girls of New York, and 19. The Harvest of Tares [criminals]; Photo Titles: "Typical Toughs" "Sewing and Starving," "I Scrubs"

10/4: Progressive Symbolism and the Political Process

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 10. USDA Government Inspected, 229-253. (24)

Sinclair, Upton, The Jungle (New York: Viking, 1906, 1946), 91-105 (14).

"Sinclair Gives Proof of Meat Trust Frauds," New York Times, May 28, 1906.

Questions: Upton Sinclair's lurid exposé of horrible working and sanitary conditions in the new mass-produced meatpacking facilities in Chicago lead to a defining crusade of the Progressive Era. President Theodore Roosevelt's charismatic style transformed an expose into a moral crusade in the public interest. How much was the Meat Inspection Act of 1906 the result of potent symbolism manipulated by muckraking journalists and the colorful popular celebrity president Theodore Roosevelt? Or Isn't There Greater Importance in the Legislative Jungle? See Canvas for further questions and paper suggestion.

10/9: Americanization and Nativism in the "Tribal Twenties"

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 11. Sacco and Vanzetti, 256-280 (24).

Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer, "The Case Against the 'Reds.'" Forum (1886-1930), February 1920.

Lucian Parrish, Rep Tx, Rep Rosedale, NY, Rep. Raker, Tx April 20, 1921, debating immigration restriction Congressional Record (Apr 20, 1921), 511-14.

Questions: The trial of the century, pitting civil libertarians and immigrant advocates against defenders of an older Anglo-Saxon America. How could a murder trial of two obscure radical Italian immigrants become an international cause célèbre? What social divisions, and conflicting ideas about America, did such a highly publicized trial reveal about the country in the 1920s? Why were Representatives Parish and Raker of Texas, and the Attorney General of the United States, A. Mitchell Palmer, so motivated to exclude and deport un-naturalized immigrants?

10/11: Acts of God and Man – The Dust Bowl and the Great California Migrations

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 12. Dust Bowl Odyssey, 284-308 (24).

John Steinbeck, "The Harvest Gypsies," San Francisco News, Oct 6-12, 1936.

Questions for class: The popular fiction of John Steinbeck and photography of Dorothea Lange created a symbolic landscape for understanding 1930s Dust Bowl migrants to California. What can quantitative social history and scholarship tell us about the majority of new Californians who fell outside that symbolic framework? What can we learn from Steinbeck's journalism that we can't learn from his novel, The Grapes of Wrath, the film, or the social historians that Lytle and Davidson synthesized: James Gregory and others, whose work is based on census data?

See on Canvas: Options to research Mexican American Repatriation (Deportation) in the 1930s and the photography of Dorothea Lange.

FALL BREAK

10/18: Introduction to the Atomic Bomb Debate

Assignment: 1. Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 13. The Decision to Drop the Bomb, 310-334 (24).

2. Read Harry Truman's diary entries for July 17-18, and July 25, 1945, link is on Canvas. From "Notes by Harry S. Truman on the Potsdam Conference, July 17-30, 1945," Harry S. Truman Presidential Library, Questions: How can differing models of decision making re-focus our understanding of world-changing events like the use of the atomic bomb against Japan? What happens when we relocate aspects of "the decision" from the deliberations of specific "rational actors" in 1945 -- Harry Truman and his immediate advisors -- and consider the international history of air war, or competition among branches of the largest military bureaucracy in human history? But wasn't it Truman who said "the buck stops here"? What can a careful reading of Truman's diary tell us about his framework of thinking and decision making, especially with respect to the claim that Russian entry into the war might be enough to end the war without atomic weapons, and that Truman still felt restrained from inflicting "inhuman barbarism" on civilians through terror bombing?

10/23: Atomic Bomb Historiography

Robert James Maddox, "Why We Had to Drop the Atomic Bomb," American Heritage (May/June 1995). Defense of the orthodox explanation.

Gar Alperovitz, "Hiroshima: Historians Reassess," Foreign-Policy 99 (Summer 1995). Still making the case for "atomic diplomacy."

John W. Dower, "Three Narratives of Our Humanity," in History Wars: The Enola Gay and Other Battles for the American Past, edited by Edward T. Linenthal and Tom Engelhardt. New York: Holt Paperbacks, 1996, 63-96.

Questions: In the argument between Alperovitz and Maddux, what pieces of evidence seem most compelling in their making their case? Be aware of how your own affinities--in this case, nationalism--may shape your interpretations. Be aware of your own opinion going in. And don't shrink from letting one author change your mind. Was it necessary? Was it a real decision? Where does Dower fall on the issues of atomic diplomacy, the options for Japanese surrender without nuclear weapons, and the importance of placing any narrative in a "tragic" rather than a "triumphalist" frame?

Read ahead into Walker's synthesis of the "middle ground" between these two positions.

10/25: A Piece of the Puzzle: Using Historiography to Explore Researchable Questions on the Atomic Bomb Decision

Walker, J. Samuel. "Recent Literature on Truman's Atomic Bomb Decision: A Search for Middle Ground." Diplomatic History 29, no. 2 (April 2005): 311-34 (23 pages).

Sign up to explore one of the scholars and sub-issues referenced by Walker. All students will leave class with a reference to another scholar for Tuesday's paper and discussion.

10/30: Historiography Paper on the Bomb is Due 4-5 Pages. Class presentations and dialogue on interpretation and evidence.

This assignment calls for a critical evaluation of a scholar who you identify using footnotes in Samuel Walker's historiographical article (Walker's book is fair game). "Follow the Footnotes!" Don't quote Walker but read for yourself the scholar he cites and summarizes. What is the strongest line of argument, best evidence, and how does it compare to other scholars we have read?! Be prepared to support and debate. You must choose a scholarly article or book and focus on a specific sub-issue, as outlined in my guide to the issues. Do not choose a news story, opinion editorial, popular magazine essay. Make sure your scholar bases his or her conclusions on solid research in the archives.

Bonus Points: In addition to the scholar you presented, you may read and reference another viewpoint by a scholar with a different interpretation. Who is more persuasive and why? This can be someone else referenced in the Walker article, someone a classmate presented. The importance here is that you at least take into account counterargument, and at most build a case for the inadequacy of the scholar whose position you present on Tuesday.

11/1: Women and Popular Culture: The Power of the Media

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 14. From Rosie to Lucy, 339-363 (24).

Very Short Selections from Nancy A Walker, ed., Women's Magazines: 1940-1960: Gender Roles and the Popular Press (New York, Bedford St. Martin's: 1998): "Meet the Berckmans: The Story of a Mother Working on Two Fronts," Ladies' Home Journal, October 1942; J. Edgar Hoover, "Mothers ... Our Only Hope," Woman's Home Companion, January 1944; Jennifer Colton, "Why I Quit Working," Good Housekeeping, September 1951; "Women in Flight," Mademoiselle, December 1952; "The Married Woman Goes Back to Work," Woman's Home Companion, October 1956.

View Segments of "Betty: Girl Engineer" a famous Father Knows Best episode. See relevant time signatures in Canvas.

Questions (See Canvas for fuller questions): How did gender norms for women change from World War II to the Cold War? Do you think the popular media reflected or shaped popular attitudes toward motherhood, housework, and women's paid work outside the home? How can we know? Within the dominant patriarchal norms of the time, how much room could women like Lucy Ricardo carve for autonomy, even rebellion? Was Cold War culture uniformly down on married women's work, as reflected in the women's magazines and TV shows like Father Knows Best?

11/6: Feminism in the 1960s: the Challenge to Gender Inequality

John Hollitz, "From Mystique to Militance: Betty Friedan and Gloria Steinem," in Contending Voices, volume 2 (NY: Houghton Mifflin, 2003), 247-65. See esp. The National Organization for Women 1966 Statement of Purpose
Tillmon, Johnnie. "Welfare Is a Women's Issue." Liberation News Service (415) February 1972, in Linda Gordon, ed., America's Working Women (1976), 355-358.

The Politics of Housework by Pat Mainardi of Redstockings

Questions: What kinds of "rights" were Betty Friedan, Gloria Steinem, Pat Mainardi, Johnnie Tillmon, principally interested in? What was the difference between women's rights and women's liberation? What changes did they think needed to happen before women could enjoy equality, and how did each think that gender equality was related to other struggles for peace and justice and against poverty and racism? How can anything so trivial as housework be considered "political"? This gives one meaning to "the personal is political." What other meanings of this famous slogan were there?

11/8: The Greensboro Sit-Ins and the Diffusion of Protest

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 15. Sitting In, 366-387 (save the last pages of chapter for next class).

Questions: Were the sit-ins that spread rapidly from the Greensboro epicenter in February 1960 spontaneous eruptions of protest or deeply rooted in past strategies, prefigured in ways hidden to us? Try to sort through all the sociological theory to pick those concepts that really explain why 1960? Why Greensboro? Why did the protests spread so quickly?

Selected black and white newspaper articles on the Greensboro sit ins (Google Drive Canvas Links): Compare black and white, sympathetic and critical news coverage. Any clues about how they spread or their strategies of exploiting the "structure of opportunities"?

11/13: Black Revolution and Martin Luther King, Jr.

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 15. Sitting In, 387-394, for a synopsis of protest up to the "Revolution of 1963."
Thomas F. Jackson, From Civil Rights to Human Rights (Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2006), chapter 6, "Jobs and Freedom." Yours truly. Introduces all the questions and surveys the landscape with a clear thesis. What is it?

Tom Kahn, "March's radical demands point way for struggle," New America, 9/24/63. Kahn was a democratic socialist close to Bayard Rustin who organized the March on Washington, AND was a member of SNCC, a white who went to historically black Howard University, a socialist publishing in the Socialist Party newspaper, an organizer close to Rustin and Randolph. How are Kahn's issues in SNCC different from those summarized in ATF?

Martin Luther King, Jr., "The Unresolved Race Question," District 65 of the Retail, Department Store Union, October 23, 1963, in Michael Honey, ed., All Labor Has Dignity (Boston, Beacon, 2011)

Questions: To what degree are Davidson and Lytle correct, that the March on Washington marked the start of serious divisions within the movement, over violence and revolution, and to what degree was there still consensus over what would be necessary to bring freedom and jobs and justice to all? (Hint: I have a disagreement).

11/15: Constituencies and Perspectives at the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom August 28, 1963

"Doing History" 4-5 pp. paper is DUE. In-Class Round Table Post March Wrap Up – It's September 1, 1963

See Canvas and Google Drive Folder for a range of sources – Jackson's digital archive, if you will – on the planning and execution of the March on Washington. Your paper may not focus on Martin Luther King!

11/20: Vietnam and American Memory

Davidson and Lytle, After the Fact, 17. Where Trouble Comes, 420-446 (26).

Hal Wingo and Ronald Haerberle (Photographer), "The Massacre at Mylai: Exclusive Pictures, Eyewitness Accounts, Life (December 5, 1969) pp. 36-45. Google Books accessed November 11, 2014. Click here.

PBS Frontline Documentary: "Remember My Lai"

Part 1: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=QcDa5IIFSMQ>: Varnado Simpson and Truong Thi Le, at 14:40-20:25

Part 2: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=eN_gEAAGwfw: Ron Ridenhour and Varnado Simpson, 21:40-26:48

Questions: Why did it take over 15 years to have a realistic film made about Vietnam combat? What does the progression from The Green Berets to Rambo: First Blood to Apocalypse Now to Platoon say about our capacity to confront our own history? How was the Army able to keep details of the 1968 Son My massacre from the public for a year and a half, and how did it come to light? Does the story have any heroes and where did ultimate responsibility lie for the killing of over 300 unarmed civilians?
