COURSE DESCRIPTION:

During the mid-nineteenth century, Ireland suffered a series of famines that nearly halved the island's population—in less than one decade, from 1846 to 1855, between 1.1 and 1.5 million people died at the hands of starvation or disease and another 2.1 million emigrated. The difficulties of these years were captured at the time and later recalled through art, literature, music, and more. Indeed, few (if any) events have had a larger impact on Irish history, politics, or national memory than "The Great Hunger." This course is designed to introduce students to the history of the Irish Famine and its repercussions. Together, we will examine the broad political, social, and cultural impacts of the Famine. Individually, students will conceptualize, research, and write papers on a related topic of their own choosing.

Student Learning Objectives:

Upon completion of this course, students will be able to:

1. Identify an appropriate research topic and pertinent primary and secondary sources.
2. Critically analyze various primary sources within historical context.
3. Evaluate historiographical debates within the field of Irish history.
4. Conduct original research by investigating and interpreting primary and secondary sources. [Historical Research]
5. Use evidence-based reasoning to interpret the past coherently while developing and presenting an original argument, orally and in writing. [Historical Interpretation]

Reading & Technology Requirements:

The following book is recommended as a good reference book, but it is not required. It is available for purchase at the university bookstore.

Rampolla, Mary Lynn. A Pocket Guide to Writing in History, 8th ed. Bedford/St. Martin's, 2015.

Please note, the assigned readings for this course are designed to provide insight into historical studies of the Irish Famine. If you are interested in a narrative of these events, I am happy to recommend a number of texts available at Jackson Library or online. In addition, I have placed the following on reserve for further reference:

Crowley, John, William J. Smyth, Michael Murphy, Charlie Roche, Helen Bradley, and Tomas Kelly. Atlas of the Great Irish Famine. New York: New York University Press, 2012. (print reserve)

Ó Murchadha, Ciarán. The Great Famine: Ireland's Agony, 1845-1852. London: Continuum, 2011. (e-reserve)

COURSE FORMAT & REQUIREMENTS:

Attendance and Participation: The basic format of this course will consist of six weeks of group meetings during which we will discuss assigned readings on the Irish Famine (most readings will be made available via Canvas). After the first several weeks, students will meet individually or collectively with the professor to discuss and assist their progress on independent research projects. Attendance at and participation in both class and individual meetings is required and will be recorded each meeting. Each student may miss up to 2 classes with no grade penalty. Each absence in excess of 2 will lower the final grade by 2 points. If you need to miss a class, please contact me as soon as possible (preferably in advance).

The early weeks will also include short, sourcing exercises designed to familiarize students with library resources.

◇ Sourcing Exercise #1

◇ Sourcing Exercise #2

Writing Assignments: The primary purpose of this course is to guide students as they write a 15-20 page, research paper. Writing a solid research paper takes time, planning, and rewriting (among other things). This is not a project that can be completed the night before it is due. In order to emphasize the importance of planning and editing, I have developed a number of short assignments that will walk you through the many steps involved in producing a research paper. Below I have identified these steps and provided brief descriptions of each assignment. More information will be provided as the semester progresses.

Step 1: Identify a research question

Identifying a research topic often begins with a question. Not a question that can be answered with a short yes or no or even a simple sentence. Instead, you want to ask a question that will provide deeper insight into the past. As you read the assigned readings during the first weeks of the semester, think about the questions that historians are asking about the Irish Famine. How do they answer these questions? What sources do they use to answer these questions? What is their argument? What questions are left unanswered? This final question—what questions are left unanswered—will point you in the direction of your own research question.

Writing Assignment #1, 3-5 Research Questions: Please write 3-5 research questions. When developing your list of possible questions, remember to consider the following: can this question be answered in one sentence or does this topic have potential to provide insight into the past? Is this topic feasible, both in regards to length and to sources? (SLO 1)

Writing Assignment #2, Paragraph: Write a short paragraph (4-5 sentences) explaining your proposed topic and include a related research question. (SLO 1)

Step 2: Building a research topic

Once you have a question in mind, you will want to start to find answers. The first step is to identify possible sources. What have historians already written about this topic? What sources have they used? What sources would allow you to find answers to your own question and are these sources available at Jackson Library, through appropriate internet archives, or via Interlibrary Loan?

Writing Assignment #3, Research Proposal and Bibliography: Your research proposal should identify 1) your topic 2) the historiographical discussion with which you plan to engage and 3) a proposed bibliography. (SLO 1, 3)

Step 3: Conducting Research

Once you have identified possible primary sources, you need to read and analyze them.

Writing Assignment #4, Primary Source Analysis: Write a 1-2 page analysis of a primary source document related to your research paper. Please identify, contextualize, and analyze the source. In particular, explain how this source advances your argument. Include a copy of the primary source with your analysis. (SLO 2)

Step 4: Creating an argument

Once you begin your primary research, what answers do you find? What patterns can you detect in the sources? And what is the best way to present this argument? Often, this step involves significant outlining and writing as you think about and reconsider the best ways to organize your evidence so that it makes sense to a larger audience.

Writing Assignment #5, Outline: Your outline should include an introduction that 1) introduces the topic in an engaging manner 2) sets out the argument (including historiographical contribution) and 3) prepares the reader. Your full outline should then include detailed bullet points and section paragraphs that make the development of the argument clear. (SLO 1, 3, 4, and 5)

Writing Assignment #6, Presentation: During weeks 11 and 12, each student will be required to present their research to the entire class. These presentations provide an excellent opportunity to both synthesize and articulate your findings. More information will be provided in advance. (SLO 1, 2, 3, and 4)

Step 5: Writing and writing and writing

Writing a research paper rarely (never?) occurs in one go. Rather, you will want to write a draft, receive peer reviews, and rewrite (editing in response to reviews). Furthermore, reviewing each other's work will strengthen your own writing by providing you with an opportunity to consider other arguments and how to present your questions and critiques in a helpful and constructive manner.

Writing Assignment #7, Polished Rough Draft: Your polished rough draft should be as close to a final draft as you can produce without formal feedback (10-12 pages, minimum), and should include endnotes/footnotes and a bibliography. (SLO 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5)

Writing Assignment #8, Peer Review: Please provide a one-page, typed review of your peers' papers (each student will review two papers) and provide copies to me as well. Be kind, but also offer constructive feedback—

What are the paper's strengths? Where is there room for improvement? Can the argument be clearer or better supported in places?

Final Papers (SLO 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5): Students will produce a 15-20 page research paper based on primary and secondary sources. Although paper topics will vary according to individual student interests, all papers must relate to the course theme of the Irish Famine. The final paper with bibliography and notes will be due by 11:59pm, Friday, December 1st.

Due Dates: The assignments for this class are designed to build upon each other and guide students toward the production of an original research paper. As a result, it is essential that students turn in all assignments, on time. Should you anticipate any difficulty meeting these deadlines, please contact the professor as soon as possible.

Academic Integrity Policy: Please cite sources using footnotes or endnotes. Plagiarism is a breach of the university's academic integrity policy. For more information on this policy, see <https://osrr.uncg.edu/academic-integrity/violations-and-sanctions/plagiarism/>.

Final Grades will be calculated according to the following:

Participation and Attendance (both in class and during individual meetings):	10%
Sourcing Exercises #1 and #2	5%
Writing Assignments:	50% (total)
#1 3-5 Research Questions & #2 Paragraph	5%
#3 Research Proposal and Bibliography	10%
#4 Primary Source Analysis	5%

In keeping with UNCG policy, I will post a midterm grade for you in UNCGenie by the end of the sixth week of the term (September 22nd). That grade will not appear on your transcript or in your GPA calculations. Instead, it is intended to help you and your academic advisor understand how you are doing in the course up to that point. If you review your midterm grade and find it to be lower than you hoped, I encourage you to talk to me, so we can make a plan together for your success. Please realize that this grade will only incorporate those assignments completed and graded by September 22nd.
