

Syllabus: History 502

African American History: Selected Topics to 1865

Professor Schweninger

This course is an examination of the African American experience from its beginning in Africa, through the slave trade, slavery in the Caribbean, Central and South America, British North America and the Gulf Coast, and the United States. It will include discussions of slaves and free people of color and the coming of emancipation during the Civil War.

The course will consist of lectures, readings, weekly presentations, a paper, and two examinations. The lectures will be on a topic related to the reading assignment for the week. The required reading, listed under "Schedule of Assignments," will include sections or chapters from John Hope Franklin and Alfred Moss, From Slavery To Freedom: A History of African Americans, eighth edition (New York: McGraw Hill, 2000) [hereafter cited as FSTF] and Peter Kolchin, American Slavery, 1619-1877 (New York: Hill and Wang, 1993) [AS]. Also on the "Schedule of Assignments" are additional topics which may be covered in lectures or class discussions.

Besides the required reading, each undergraduate student should read at least one article, essay, or book-chapter per week on the week's topic; each graduate student should read two. You should begin the course by perusing the assigned sections or chapters in FSTF and AS, and then refer to the bibliographical sections at the end of the volumes to find an appropriate article or essay. For example, during week fourth week we will examine the African Slave Trade. After reading Chapter 3 in FSTF, you should turn to the bibliographical reference section (pp. 643-45). You might wish to read a group of documents in Elizabeth Donnan's Documents Illustrative of the History of the Slave Trade to America, or a chapter from Daniel Mannix's Black Cargoes, or the article by J. F. Rippy on "The Negro and Spanish Pioneers in the New World," in Journal of Negro History. The 7th and 8th floor of the stacks in the library houses material on our subject.

You may also wish to search websites for relevant readings. Your website research should include only articles from scholarly journals, chapters from books, or at least twenty pages of primary sources (see below for a few addresses). You also may purchase Donald R. Wright's African Americans in the Early Republic, 1789-1831 (Arlington Heights, Illinois: Harlan Davidson, 1993) and use it for additional readings; or read chapters from John Hope Franklin and Loren Schweninger, Runaway Slaves: Rebels on the Plantation (New York: Oxford Press, 1999), which can be found at http://www.netlibrary.com/ebook_info.asp?product_id=53406; or read a group of five petitions from Loren Schweninger, ed., The Southern Debate over Slavery: Petitions To Southern Legislatures, 1778-1864 (Urbana: Illinois Press, 2001), which can be found at <http://www.press.uiillinois.edu/epub/books/schweninger>. During each class session time will be set aside for general discussion, questions, and a brief presentation (four or five minutes) by students on their outside reading. At the class session on 25 April you should turn in a bibliography of the material that you read during the semester. It should include the week number, topic for the week, and the citation for the article, essay, or book chapter read. For example:

Tenth Week: The South's Peculiar Institution
Kenneth Stamp, The Peculiar Institution: Slavery in the Ante-Bellum South (New York: Vintage Books, 1956), chapter 4.

You may write your paper on any topic dealing with the subject matter of the course. For example, you might wish to write about slave resistance: What constituted resistance? Did it vary in different parts of the Americas? During different time periods? What were the results? Direct quotations should be foot- or end-noted, and the paper should include a bibliography (for questions on style see Mary Lynn Rampolla, A Pocket Guide to Writing History, 4th edition [Boston and New York: Bedford/St. Martin's, 2004]). Undergraduates should write a five- to seven-page research paper; graduate students should write a fifteen- to twenty-page research paper. Both should include a summary of secondary sources as well as the use primary sources. At the class session during the fifth week, each student be ready to hand in a brief bibliography and one-page proposal for the paper. A clean, typed copy of the paper should be handed in on Monday, April 25, 2005; late papers will be accepted only in extreme circumstances.

During the semester there will be two examinations, combining essay and objective questions. The first will be given at midterm, on Monday, February 28, 2005; the final exam will be given on the final day of class during the semester. Makeups will be given only in emergency situations.

For both undergraduate and graduate students your class participation and talks to the class (they should be extemporaneous but you may refer to an outline), combined with your bibliography and paper, will constitute one-third of your final grade; the midterm and final examination will each count one-third. Attendance is required and more than one missed class could result in a lower grade. Your paper will not be returned so please make a copy for your files. My office hours in 240 McIver are one hour before this class meets and by appointment.
