This course examines developments that created and shaped Western civilization between about 2000 B.C. and A.D. 1600. We will treat “civilization” as a complex form of cultural adaptation by peoples and societies. The story of Western civilization is the story of successive adaptations by different peoples and societies. Students will consider the problems faced by successive different peoples and societies and the solutions they evolved, in part by borrowing from the past. Because this process involves successive peoples and societies, it is common to consider Western civilization as a series of stages. One way to define the series in the time period we are considering is chronological: ancient, medieval, and early modern. Another way is by reference to different peoples: Greek, Roman, Germanic. We will actually be using both perspectives.

Students will meet each week in both lecture classes and smaller discussion sections. Students are responsible for completing the assigned readings in the textbook and in the assigned primary sources (on CD or on the web) before each class. Class and discussion section attendance is mandatory. More than two unexcused absences will cause the loss of a full grade. More than three will cause a student to be dropped from the course. There will be four exams in the course, various writing assignments, and occasional quizzes.

All writing assignments are to be turned in at the Discussion Section meeting.
