This class will introduce students to some of the major interpretations and works about American history since 1865.

The major assignment for this class is to do the weekly reading and engage with the material you encounter. A sizeable part of your grade will be determined by your participation in discussion opportunities. Non-participation or weak participation will obviously result in a low grade. I define participation qualitatively, not quantitatively. In addition to participating in our weekly class discussions, you will have a chance to discuss the readings on Blackboard. At the mid-point of the semester, I will give you a chance to offer a self-evaluation of your participation in the class.

Each student should write four essays (three of 4-5 pages and one of 7-8 pages) on four different topics listed in the syllabus. Essays are due at the class meeting in which the topic is covered (no exceptions!). The longer essay should be written for the week you are assigned an extra book to read. These essays should represent your analysis and commentary on the issues and/or arguments raised by the readings. You should neither merely summarize the readings nor ramble incoherently. For the longer essay, you will most certainly want to compare and contrast how the two books you read approach the particular historical question(s) we are examining. Overall, you should address what you have read in some creative and brilliant way. You can address any subject, but your essays should obviously focus on the assigned readings and should not focus too narrowly on some trivial point. Of course, your essays should be well written and well organized. Essays should be typed, double-spaced; you need to use correct Chicago Manual of Style citation in your essays.

If you have to miss class, you need to let me know before class begins if at all possible. Also, you will need to prepare a written summary on the readings for any week you miss class (due the following class meeting).

A take-home final exam will be given for this class, which will, of course, be comprehensive.
